Designing my next project - A cabinet for CD's
November 2010

Dear Friends

It's been a while since my last letter. Hopefully you've been waiting on the edge of your seat. I've finished up and delivered the two chairs I was working on, entertained a delegation of woodworkers from Japan, entertained a delegation from Germany evaluating Portsmouth for an international price for Vitalizing Democracy, made some gift items which are now in the Concord League of NH Craftsmen shop, and done some house repairs getting ready for winter. Now I'm about to start my next furniture project. It's a cabinet to hold CD's, plus some other drawers to get clutter out of site.

A scale model

Here Pam is showing you the scale model. For the CD's the cabinet will have eight drawers in two columns, and these will be behind doors to simplify the look. Between these columns will be a set of four smaller drawers, and another with a curved front bridges this whole set. We settled on this concept the previous time we met, when I showed her about a dozen quick sketches of various ideas.

Drawing the curves for the legs

Two curved legs will attach to the side of the cabinet. Here we are drawing the curves on a full sized drawing on plywood. Design is a participatory process. You can see on the model how the curves legs will be. They will be from bubinga, as Pam wanted a figured wood.

Selecting the hardware

In this photo I am showing Pam the hardware that will be used. The CD drawers will be on full extension plus slides to make sure there will be access to the ones all the way in back. We've found a spring loaded rack for the discs so they will pop up and op in.

The doors in front of the CD drawers is where I'll do some carving. Pam is of Macedonian descent, so we've picked a theme reflective of that. Sorry it's hard to see here. The design has grape leaves, a hoopoe bird, and a Macedonian shield, with vines and tendrils in an Art Neuvo style. Actually, I showed Pam two hoopoe sketches and she picked the other one, with it's crest unfolded.

I'm certainly looking forward to getting started on this. I had planned to buy the wood today, but alas, I'm home sick. I'll send more articles as the work progresses. If you enjoy this letter please pass it on to anyone you know who may enjoy it too.
